CORNWELLS SOLDIER APPARENTLY ENDS LIFE WITH SHOT IN TELEPHONE BOOTH AT FRANKFORD; WAS A MILITARY POLICEMAN

Phillip J. Hanssens, 20, Victim, Was Located at Fort, Pickett, Va.

THINK HE MADE A CALL
Phone Receiver Cord Wrapped About Arm; .32 Calibre Pistol in Booth

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Aug. 14—A youthful soldier, who apparently shot himself to death in a telephone booth in Bridge street station of the Frankford Elevated, Philadelphia, last night, was identified this morning at the Philadelphia city morgue as Private First Class Phillip J. Hanssens, son of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Hanssens, of School Lane and Bowman avenue.

Presumably having made a telephone call, or preparing to make one, Hanssens apparently shot himself with a .32 calibre pistol. According to his parents the young man had no pistol of his own, and evidently used the weapon turned over to him by army officials to use in carrying out his duties as a military police officer.

Identification was made by the youth's father, who was summoned from home. Other passengers in the station heard a shot and found Hanssens slumped over the telephone, a wound in his right temple and a .32 calibre pistol by his side.

Who the young man, aged 20, had called his mother was at a loss to say today, the family having no telephone.

NEWTOWN EXCHANGE CLUB URGES SCRAP DRIVE

Favor Cooperative Meeting To Be Held September 17th

NEED MORE HELP

NEWTOWN, Aug. 14—The Newtown Exchange Club is urging the drive for scrap which is now in progress here to aid national defense. The drive was discussed by the members at the meeting held in the Temperance House.

The salvage committee composed of John Gaine, Gordon Fromm, Frank Fabian, with Mr. Gaine, as chairman who outlined the work, believe it would be well to add additional members to the staff.

Since the Exchange Club began its work several months ago, the need for scrap has steadily increased.

Mr. Gaine announced there would be a drive the last two weeks in September with a rally day on the 13th of October.

He suggested that the heads of the various local organizations working on the drive meet with the Exchange Club on Sept. 17.

H. G. Fromm pointed out that the movement was getting definitely organized and under way.

Dr. Strathie spoke of the tin can collections.

Europe Under the Nazis is The Subject of Talk at Rotary Club

"Europe Under the Nazis," was the topic ably discussed by Frans van Walson and Mr. Muller, both of Princeton, N. J., when they spoke before the weekly meeting of the Rotary Club yesterday afternoon at the Penguin Flyer Restaurant, City Line.

Muller, who has been in the United States 12 years gave much informative background information on the present Germany, while vanWalson, who has been here only two years, gave information on the more current aspect of the Nazi regime. The latter was in Holland when that country was bombed and he told of his escape to Britain and then his trip to this country.

REINFORCEMENTS REACH MALTA

LONDON—Military reinforcements have reached Malta after a bitter sea and air battle that resulted in the loss of the British cruiser Manchester while submarines scored two hits on enemy cruisers and at least two enemy U-boats were sunk, the Admiralty disclosed today.

The convoy, reportedly the largest ever to reach the bomb-ravaged island of Malta, carried a number of fighter planes for the defenders of the British outposts.

Packs of enemy U-boats, a large number of torpedo-carrying and dive bombing aircraft and strong forces of E-boats—torpedo boats—attempted to attack the convoy in the central narrows of the Mediterranean.

The Manchester belonged to the Newcastle class. The warship was of 9,400 tons and carried a normal complement of 760. The craft manned 12 six-inch guns, eight four-inch anti-aircraft guns and 21 other types of guns. The warship also carried three aircraft.

Another Son for Lindberghs

Detroit—A baby boy weighing nine pounds was born to the Charles A. Lindberghs yesterday in Henry Ford Hospital, the Detroit Times said today.

"No official announcement of the birth was made, but the Times was informed that the baby, the famous couple's fifth, was a nine-pound son," the paper said.

The condition of both Mrs. Lindbergh and the baby was reported as good. The couple have been living in suburban Bloomfield hills.

Russians Offering "Tenacious Resistance"

Berlin—By Official German Wireless—The German High Command said today that in the Caucasus region the Russians, taking advantage of the mountainous terrain, were offering "tenacious resistance" in order to cover retreats from the north Caucasus ports.

The High Command acknowledged that heavy fighting still raged in the Voronezh area and that 35 of 45 attacking Russian planes were shot down. It was admitted that the Russians were counter-attacking southeast of Lake Ilmen and on the Kolchov front but claimed the attacks were broken by the Germans.

FIRST STAGE OF SOLOMON ISLANDS BATTLE OVER, "AND AMERICANS HAVE WON IT," SAYS REPORT FROM SYDNEY

Full Division of American Troops Now Firmly Entrenched in Islands—Reinforcements Pour In—Believe Allies Will Soon Have Complete Control of Tulagi

LONDON, Aug. 14 — The first stage of the Solomon Islands battle is over "and the Americans have won it," the well-informed London Evening Star reported in a special Sydney dispatch today.

Coincident with disclosure by the Yorkshire Post that a full division of American troops are now firmly entrenched in the Solomons, with reinforcements pouring in, and a call by Major General Mark W. Clark, commander of United States ground forces in Great Britain for an offensive in Europe, the Star said:

"In the last two days, U. S. Marines have made such progress in the Tulagi area that they will not be dislodged unless the Japanese succeed in bringing up heaviest reinforcements.

"Latest reports indicate that strongest American reinforcements have been thrown in against stubborn but weakening Japanese resistance at Tulagi.

"It is believed that the Allies have or soon will have complete control of Tulagi Island as well as the Guadalcanal air field and the most important parts of Florida Island."

General Clark was outspoken in his call for an Allied attack in Europe to follow up the triumph which seems to be in the making on the other side of the globe.

"MRS. MINIVER"

About once in a blue moon a motion picture is produced which deserves something better than the superlatives the publicity men attach to every film that isn't a downright flop.

It isn't particularly important whether "Mrs. Miniver" is one of the ten best pictures of all time.
It is important that it succeeds with understanding and understanding in projecting the meaning of this war without once showing a battlefield or indulging in spectacular heroics. "Mrs. Miniver" has captured something which eluded all the other war films.

Murals are great or not great for the use they make of imposed limitations of space and form. Because motion pictures are free than any other art, running at will through time and space, they frequently suffer from their own liberties. Director William Wyler has established his own limitations and held himself scrupulously within them. He has reduced the microcosm of a global war to the microcosm of one family and its neighbors. And these very boundaries are the secret of the greatness of "Mrs. Miniver."

This film reflects in the experiences of a suburban family the experiences of all humanity that has been touched by war. In his first picture, Orson Welles pioneered with trick shots, sound effects and unorthodox direction. Mr. Wyler shows what can be done with a frugal use of fundamental things—the indestructible good humor of common people, reticence, the routine of home, the after-glow of adolescence and the stability of the man and wife relation.

Poignant without being specu-lar, quiet without losing one jot or tittle of emotion, "Mrs. Miniver" succeeds in bringing realization of the fact that this is a people's war.
Even without the one direct touch of propaganda at the end, this would have been clear. For the film has the triple asset of a scenario adaptation that is practically original, acting that is always faithful to its simplicity of spirit, and direction that puts to shame the harassed efforts of Hollywood's virtuoso.

BACK YARD SPECIALISTS

It's a great satisfaction to beat somebody in his own back yard. It's a satisfaction a detachment of United States Marines in England must be feeling at the moment.

The Marines have been training over a special Commando-hazard course in one of London's famous parks. It is the course of the Coldstream Guards, one of Britain's oldest and proudest regiments. Recently the Marines debated teams from the Coldstream Guards over the Guards' own course 5 to 0. It is to the Guards' credit that they want a return match, but the Marines figure that this Commando business has been a Marine specialty for generations and they're not worrying about the outcome.

But it is likely that the Marines are looking far beyond the return match with the Coldstream Guards.
The Marines have their eyes on somebody else's back yard and they're looking forward with impatience to raising several kinds of hell in it. Their impatience is shared by many.

The citizen who lent Uncle Sam some money in July, with war bonds as security, may just as well realize that the August quota also has to be reached.

2 MORNING SERVICES PLANNED AT CROYDON

Rev. T. Kohlmeier Arranges Such So War Workers
Might Be Present

THE SUNDAY MEETINGS

Beginning with Sunday, St. Luke's Lutheran Church, State Road and Ex-celstor avenue, Croydon, will conduct two Sunday morning services. The pastor, the Rev. T. Kohlmeier, announces that an early service of Matins ular Sunday service at 11. The purpose of this arrangement is to accommodate war workers and others who may be prevented by circumstances beyond their control from attending church at vices. "In these days of national stress it is vitally important that divine guidance and help be implored for the country's good. The public worship of God must therefore take first place in the lives of Americans if we want our nation to experience God's blessing.

Surely none of us want to lose the privilege of Freedom of Worship by neglect. There is no agency in the country that can strengthen morale as well as the church can. We therefore urgently call upon all readers to heed the call: 'Back to the Church,' states the pastor.

No More "Gas" To Visit Ill in Hospitals

concerning sugar rationing. Yesterday still another representative spent the day here giving advice about tire rationing.

While in the main the Board was complimented upon the splendid manner in which it had performed the work there were a couple of interpretations made by the representative with which the public should be acquainted as it will undoubtedly lead to many hardships.

One of the sections under "Special" rationing states: "To obtain necessary medical attention or therapeutic treatment." The interpretation placed upon it by the Board was that if a person was taken to a hospital for an operation or for observation which necessitated a stay for some time, that sufficient gasoline could be allotted to the family to visit the patient, a reasonable number of times. The representative placed an entirely different construction upon it and stated that under the ruling sufficient gas only can be allowed to take the patient to the hospital. Any subsequent visits must be made by the trolley, train or bus. As a consequence of this decision the Board must refuse all applications for gas to be used in visiting patients in hospitals, sanitariums or asylums.

Another interpretation that will cause hardship is the refusal to grant an allotment of gasoline to any young man who is in the armed forces of the United States, when he comes home on a furlough or to return to camp by automobile at the expiration of his visit. A mother, wife or any other member of a family cannot obtain gas to visit a camp where a member of the family is stationed. All such trips are expected to be made by train or bus in order to conserve tires and gasoline.

A member of the Board said:
"It is a matter of regret that decisions like these have to be made. If the men who make the laws lived in and knew more about the rural districts of the country and how hard it is to get to many places that are only a few miles distant, the results would be different. Abington Hospital is only 25 miles from Bristol but to reach there by train, trolley and bus would avenue of rooms in Snellenburg's famous 5th fl. Furniture Dept. and never did "street" more deserve its name! This is especially true dur-room group, of drawer-dresser with hanging mirror, four-drawer chest and classic bed with sleigh-shaped head and foot—in mahogany veneer on hard gumwood. It doesn't make sense that this nice suite should stand so but $69.

Just the thing for a Duration Bride!

SUCH COATS! No need to worry about the winter coat situation, at least in Snellen-burg's Coat Dept. (2nd fl.). Not when an all-with soft, full yet slimming tailoring, and with stunning kit fox collar and cuffs, can be had for or $68 plus tax! Seeing is believyours early. This is, of course, an August price, and such a coat is much in demand by females who know style! Ask for Miss Cooper to advise you—she's nice!

IN TEN YEARS the reliable Snellenburg Store has never had quite such a generous August fur coat sale as at present. You have only to see the group of $159 coats to agree. The values are up to $259, and prices will return to the original amounts after this exceptional sale. Two lovely examples—a 36-in. silver fox "great coat" and a beaver-trimmed ocelot cat coat, full length! Enhancing rayon linings and good assortment of sizes. I had a personal talk with the fur buyer about these coats—just for you. Hurry down! (2nd fl.)

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE Poiret asked Roddy: "You consider it quite impossible that Miss Carlisle should have done such a thing?"

"Oh, quite! That goes without saying! Elinor's an exquisite creature—beautifully poised and balanced—no violence in her nature.
She's intellectual, sensitive and altogether devoid of animal passions.
But get twelve fat-headed fools in a jury box, and Lord knows what they can be made to believe! After all, let's be reasonable: they're not there to judge character; they're there to sift evidence. Facts—facts —fact! And the facts are unfortunate!"

Hercule Poirot nodded thoughtfully. He said: "You are a person, Mr. Welman, of sensibility and intelligence. The facts condemn Miss Carlisle. Your knowledge of her acquires her. What, then, really happened? What could have happened?"

Roddy spread out his hands in exasperation. "That's the devil of it all! I suppose the nurse couldn't have done it?"

"She was never near the sandwiches—oh, I have made the inquiries very minutely—and she could not have poisoned the tea without poisoning herself as well.
I have made quite sure of that.
Moreover, why should she wish to kill Mary Gerrard?"

Roddy cried out: "Why should any one wish to kill Mary Gerrard?"
"That," said Poirot, "seems to be the unanswerable question in this case. No one wished to kill Mary Gerrard." (He added in his own mind: "Except Elinor Carlisle.")
"Therefore, the next step logically would seem to be: Mary Gerrard was not killed! But that, alas, is not so. She was killed!"

He added, slightly melodramati-cally:

"But she is in her grave, and oh, The difference to me!"

"I beg your pardon," said Roddy.

Hercule Poirot explained:
"Wordsworth. I read him much.
Those lines express, perhaps, what you feel?"

"It?" Roddy looked stiff and unapproachable.

Poirot said: "I apologize—I apologize deeply! It is so hard—to be a detective and also a pukka scholar. As it is so well expressed in your language, there are things that one does not say. But, alas, a detective is forced to say them! He must ask questions: about people's private affairs, about their feelings!"

Roddy said: "Surely all this is quite unnecessary?"

Poirot said quickly and humbly:
"If I might just understand the position; then we will pass from the unpleasant subject and not refer to it again. It is fairly widely known, Mr. Welman, that you—admired Mary Gerrard? That is, I think, true?"

Roddy got up and stood by the window. He played with the shade tassel. He said: "Yes."

"You fell in love with her?"

"I suppose so."

"Ah, and you are now heartbroken by her death—"

"I—I suppose—I mean—well, really, M. Poirot—" He turned—a nervous, irritable, sensitive creature at bay.

Hercule Poirot said: "If you could just tell me—just show me clearly—then it would be finished with."

Roddy Welman sat down in a chair. He did not look at the other man. He spoke in a series of jerks.
"It's very difficult to explain. Must we go into it?"

Poirot said: "One cannot always turn aside and pass by from the unpleasantness of life, Mr. Welman! You say you suppose you cared for this girl. You are not sure, then?"

Roddy said: "I don't know. . . .
She was so lovely. Like a dream.
... That's what it seems like now.
A dream! Not real! All that—my neighboring first—my—well, my in-fantuation for her! A kind of madness! And now everything is finished—gone. . . . as though—as though it had never happened—"

Poirot nodded his head. He said:
"Yes, I understand. . . . And added: "You were not in England yourself at the time of her death?"
"No, I went abroad on July 9th and returned on August 1st. Elinor's telegram followed me about from place to place. I hurried home as soon as I got the news."

Poirot said: "It must have been a great shock to you. You had cared for the girl very much."

Roddy said, and there were bitterness and exasperation in his voice: "Why should these things happen to one? It's not as though one wished them to happen! It is contrary to all—to all one's ordered expectation of life!"

Hercule Poirot said: "Ah, but life is like that! It does not permit you to arrange and order it as you will.
It will not permit you to escape emotion, to live by the intellect and by reason! You cannot say, 'I will feel so much and no more.' Life, Mr. Welman, whatever else it is,
is not reasonable!"

Roderick Welman murmured:
"So it seems. . . ."

Poirot said: "A spring morning, a girl's face—and the well-ordered sequence of existence is routed." Roddy winced and Poirot went on:
"Sometimes it is little more than that—a face. What did you really know of Mary Gerrard, Mr. Welman?"

Roddy said heavily: "What did I know? So little; I see that now.
She was sweet, I think, and gentle; but really, I know nothing—nothing at all. . . . That's why, I suppose, I don't miss her. . . ."

His antagonism and resentment were gone now. He spoke naturally and simply. Hercule Poirot, as he had a knack of doing, had penetrated the other's defenses. Roddy seemed to feel a certain relief in unburdening himself. He said:
"Sweet—gentle—not very clever.
Sensitive, I think, and kind. She had a refinement that you would not expect to find in a girl of her class."

"Was she the kind of girl who would make enemies unconsciously?"

Roddy shook his head vigorously.
"No, no, I can't imagine any one disliking her—really disliking her, I mean. Spite is different."

Poirot said quickly: "Spite? So there was spite, you think?"

Roddy said absently: "Must have been—to account for that letter."

Poirot said sharply: "What letter?"

Roddy flushed and looked annoyed. He said: "Oh, nothing important."

Poirot repeated: "What letter?"
"An anonymous letter." Roddy spoke reluctantly.

"When did it come? To whom was it written?"

Roddy unwillingly Roddy explained.

Hercule Poirot murmured: "It is interesting, that. Can I see it, this letter?"

"Afraid you can't. As a matter of fact, I burned it."

"Now, why did you do that, Mr.
Welman?"

Roddy said rather stiffly: "It seemed the natural thing to do at the time."

Poirot said: "And in consequence of this letter, you and Miss Carlisle went hurriedly down to Hunter-bury?"

"We went down, yes. I don't know about hurriedly."

"But you were a little uneasy, were you not? Perhaps, even, a little alarmed?"

Roddy said even more stiffly: "I won't admit that."

Hercule Poirot cried: "But surely that was only natural! Your inheritance—that which was promised you—was in jeopardy! Surely it is natural that you should be un-quiet about the matter! Money, it is very important!"

"Not as important as you make out."

Poirot said: "Such unworldliness is indeed remarkable!" Roddy flushed. He said: "Oh, of course, the money did matter to us.
We weren't completely indifferent to it. But our main object was to—to see my aunt and make sure she was all right."

Poirot said: "You went down there with Miss Carlisle. At that time your aunt had not made a will.
Shortly afterwards she had an attack of her illness. She then wishes to make a will, but, conveniently for Miss Carlisle, perhaps, she dies that night before that will can be made."

"Look here, what are you hinting at?" Roddy's face was wrathful.

Poirot answered him like a flash:
"You have told me, Mr. Welman, as regards the death of Mary Gerard, that the motive attributed to Elinor Carlisle is absurd—that she was, emphatically, not that kind of a person. But there is now another interpretation. Elinor Carlisle had reason to fear that she might be disinherited in favor of an outsider. The letter has warned her —her aunt's broken murmurings confirm that fear. In the hall below is an attaché case with various drugs and medical supplies. It is easy to abstract a tube of morphine.
And afterwards, so I have learned, she sits in the sickroom alone with her aunt while you and the nurses are at dinner. . . ."

Roddy cried: "Good Lord, M.
Poirot, what are you suggesting now? That Elinor killed Aunt Laura? Of all the ridiculous ideas!"

Poirot said: "But you know, do you not, that an order to exhume Mrs. Welman's body has been applied for?"

"Yes, I know. But they won't find anything!"

"Suppose they do?"

"They won't!" Roddy spoke positively.

Poirot shook his head. "I am not so sure. And there was only one person, you realize, who would benefit by Mrs. Welman's dying at that moment. . . ."

Roddy sat down. His face was white, and he was shaking a little.
He stared at Poirot. Then he said:
"I thought—you were on her side. . . ."

Hercule Poirot said: "Whatever side one is on, one must face facts!
I think, Mr. Welman, that you have so far preferred in life to avoid facing an awkward truth whenever it is possible."

Roddy said: "Why harrow oneself by looking on the worst side?"

Hercule Poirot replied gravely:
"Because it is sometimes necessary. . . ." He paused a minute and then said: "Let us face the possibility that your aunt's death may be found to be due to the administration of morphine. What then?"

at the home here. The telephone receiver cord was wrapped around young Hanssens' arm when he was found, indicating he had made a call.

All identification papers and tags ordinarily carried by soldiers were missing, but there were tattoo marks on his arms. Word of the tragedy was relayed to parents of the youth by Pennsylvania Motor Police last night, and Mr. Hanssens left for Philadelphia to identify his son. The body will be brought here for burial.

Any reason for the deed could not be given by relatives of the young man, who state he enjoyed good health.

Phillip, who was born here, attended Bensalem Township high school. He enlisted in the Army on September 5, 1940, and trained at Fort Belvoir, Va., and Fort Meade, Md., then was assigned to Fort Pickett, Va., where he was stationed at the time of his death.

In addition to his parents he is survived by two sisters, Mrs. P. G. Underwood, Frankford; Mrs. Wilbur Molden, Bristol; two brothers, Eugene and Russell Hanssens, Jr., Cornwells Heights.

British Maintain Air Routes Despite Risks

The war naturally profoundly affected the overseas air service which adapted itself to conditions as they arose.

Just as the war began, Imperial Airways and British Airways, operating separate overseas services, were amalgamated by an act of Parliament and became British Overseas Airways Corporation, whose shares are entirely held by the government.

For some months after the outbreak of war British civil air lines continued to run much as usual. Certain routes, like those to Berlin and Warsaw, came to an abrupt end. But as the war progressed peace-time travellers were replaced by government officials until finally the ordinary commercial passenger almost completely disappeared.

Today all available passenger and cargo space of the overseas services is at the disposal of the Secretary of State for Air.

With the collapse of France captains and crews on the Paris run were bombed from one airdrome to another. They were bombed from Le Bourget to Villa Coublay, then to Tours and from Tours to Bordeaux.

During the evacuation from Dunkirk British air liners ferried men and supplies backwards and forwards. Sometimes the unarmed planes were attacked in the air. One was shot down. Another, badly damaged, made a crash landing in England.

The fall of France cut the Empire air route, the first stages of which led over France and Italy to Egypt. As an alternative a flying boat route nearly 5,000 miles long was established to West Africa via Lisbon.

At the West African terminus this new service linked up with the trans-African route between the Atlantic seaboard and Khartoum, which now became a principal artery of the Empire air communications linking the United Kingdom to Egypt and India. In addition, the African service between Durban and Cairo continued.

The Great Game of Politics

ation terribly acute the President permitted it to drift aimlessly for eight months. In that period the country became thoroughly confused by conflicting statements from the President and other Government officials. Less than a month ago Mr. Roosevelt himself declared that no one knew the exact rubber situation. He followed this remarkable confession by asking the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to make an investigation, which, for reasons that have been pointed out, was a mistake, and the Chief Justice's refusal was amply justified. Finally, last week he named the Baruch commission, and presumably he will follow its recommendations.

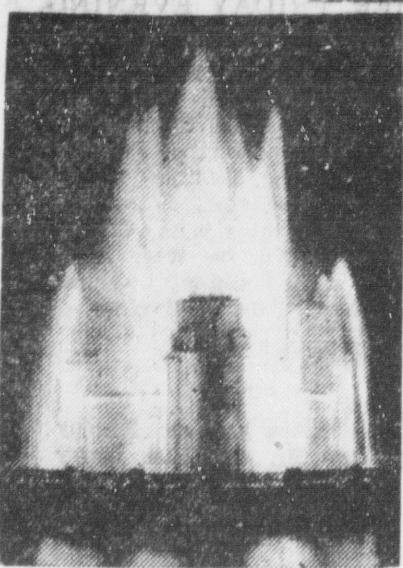

the War Production Board. The fight against inflation presents an almost incredible story of delay, with the White House, for long months, insisting that wage restraint was undesirable; then asserting that wages must be kept down; then permitting them to go up, and, finally, doing nothing whatever about them. In the meantime, real inflation creeps steadily and stealthily ahead, and the cost to everybody is great. Three months ago the President, finally accepting the view which he previously combated, announced a sound seven-point anti-inflation program, but in three months he has done literally nothing to implement a single one of the seven points.

TAKE the case of Mr. Baruch. Concededly here is the best-equipped man in the country for dealing with the problems inherent in a great war effort. Everybody knows that he had an unique experience in the last war; that he has not ceased to study these problems since; that he is the real authority on them. Yet, for nearly two years the President has let him hang around the fringes in Washington, doing this, that and the other, which, however well done, are trivial when his great ability and experience are considered. If he were not as patient as he is patriotic, he would have gotten mad and gone home long ago. Few will dispute that if, two years ago, or one year, or six months ago, or three months ago, he had been put in a position where his full capacity could have been used, we would have avoided some pretty terrible blunders and been much farther advanced. Now a pretty bad mess has been given him to clean up. There is no question that he will do it, and it is gratifying that the President has at last turned to him. But it is the delay in these matters that is appalling.

(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD, Calif.—(INS)—New interesting color contrasts in the same costume and ways of combining the different colors have resulted from material restrictions, much to the good fortune of designers and women of good taste who still enjoy the unique and sometimes exotic in their fashions. Contrasting cuffs on a woolen garment are a novel and colorful accent to one of the new Fall suits that stylist Milo Anderson did for Brenda Marshall to wear in Warner Bros. "You Can't Escape Forever."

In "Casablanca," exciting film starring Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman, Miss Bergman wears two stunning evening gowns whose interest lies in exotic color combinations. One gown features a brilliant red silk scarf that ties around the natural waistline to separate a pencil-slim skirt of black silk and a blouse of white backgrounded cotton printed in grey flowers, leaves and birds expressing an East Indian motif. The blouse is styled with long sleeves and very low cut V neckline, all edged with narrow ruffles of the same material.

The other gown Miss Bergman wears is of rust-gold jersey combined with an exotic print jersey in shades of rust-gold, yellow and brown. Styled on pencil-slim lines, the gown features a wide, set-in waistband and long sleeves of the monotone shade, and slim skirt, back of bodice and shoulder-yoke of the print. Tiny gold balls, strung on gold threads, accent the lower line of the yoke.

NEW SCHOLARSHIPS

NEW ORLEANS—(INS)—Furthering the Americas' "Good Neighbor" policy, two scholarships open to Venezuelan students for the study of medicine at Tulane university have been announced by the Standard Oil company. The scholarships, which will pay all the student's expenses including travel to and from New Orleans, will be awarded annually. On completion of training, the oil company's hospitals in Venezuela will be opened to the students.

RAIN LAST NIGHT HELPS VOLTZ NINE MOVE CLOSER TO WINNING CROWN IN SECOND HALF OF LEAGUE

Because of the rain last night, the Voltz-Texaco team moved closer to the second half crown of the Bristol Suburban League. Now the best that either Edgely or Hunter's can wish for is a tie.

Two games will be played tonight, weather permitting. Diamond will meet the Voltz-Texaco team on St. Ann's field while St. Ann's plays Hunter on the Edgely diamond. A victory for the Voltz team will assure them of the second half crown.

Also scheduled for nine o'clock tonight is a meeting of the protest board which will decide a protested game between Badenhausen and Voltz. The outcome of this protest will also aid in deciding the second half race. The board will meet in St. Ann's club and all parties concerned will be present.

Meanwhile there is a close race for the batting and pitching championship of the league. The batting list has been a see-saw affair all season with every week seeing a different player heading the column. This week, Art Kramers who is in the midst of a winning streak jumped from twelfth position to the top.

Kramers is piling the hits with a .353 average, three points better than Petrick, of St. Ann's, and Balon, of Diamond. Last week also saw Del-Rossi, of Hunter's, drop from the selected ten. Felkner, LaPolla, Hunter, and Dick have been in the first ten since the season opened.

Briggs, of the Voltz team, and Linck, of Edgely, are having a close fight for pitching honors. Briggs has won seven and lost one while Linck has a six and one total. Linck has fanned more batters and walked less than the colored twirler. Turner Ashby is the only undefeated moundman, hurling in four games. Lada, of Hunter, seems to have the best control of the ball, he having walked but five batters in ten games.

PLAYER-MANAGER BERTH NOT GOOD COMBINATION

By Lawton Carver
(I. N. S. Sports Editor)
NEW YORK, Aug. 14—(INS)—Sooner had the ink dried on Owner Alva Bradley's announcement that he had signed Lou Boudreau to a new three-year contract as manager of the Cleveland Indians when Boudreau celebrated these happy tidings by benching himself and two more Indians. Wise old heads in the baseball player-manager racket will tell you that Boudreau will bench himself many more times and perhaps permanently before that new contract runs out in 1945.

Managing and playing don't mix! A few men have gotten away with the dual role for a time. But in no instance has a player become a better player because he also managed a team, whereas there have been several instances of players slumping off from greatness to nothing under the burden of trying to hold down a position on the field and run a team at the same time.

The 25-year-old Boudreau is one of the great infield stars of this era. There haven't been many better shortstops than he in the annals of baseball. In the recent American-National All-Star games he made seemingly impossible plays afield look easy and he was a hitting star besides. He does that nearly every day.

He's a veritable wraith tip-toeing around there at shortstop, a truly fine ball player.

On the other side of the subject he seems to be an equally competent
